An exploration of metaphors in street art - a review

Stampoulidis, Georgios

2019

Document Version:
Other version

Link to publication

Citation for published version (APA):

Creative Commons License:
CC BY

General rights
Copyright and moral rights for the publications made accessible in the public portal are retained by the authors and/or other copyright owners and it is a condition of accessing publications that users recognise and abide by the legal requirements associated with these rights.

• Users may download and print one copy of any publication from the public portal for the purpose of private study or research.
• You may not further distribute the material or use it for any profit-making activity or commercial gain
• You may freely distribute the URL identifying the publication in the public portal

Take down policy
If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.
This talk focuses on Greek street art, denoting an intentional, highly creative and typically polysemiotic medium of protest and resistance. In our study on street art, marking a polysemiotic/multimodal distinction would help us toward a synthetic analysis of the interaction between language and depiction, and that of language, depiction, vision, and (potentially) smelling, touching or even hearing, into a whole communicative situation (Stampoulidis et al. 2019). In this presentation, we illustrate the significance of this distinction by reviewing examples on unisemiotic and polysemiotic street art metaphors.

References