Inside the sharing economy
Material-discursive enactments of lending and borrowing in consumer culture
Salomonsson, Karin

2017

Document Version:
Peer reviewed version (aka post-print)

Link to publication

Citation for published version (APA):

Total number of authors:
1

General rights
Unless other specific re-use rights are stated the following general rights apply:
Copyright and moral rights for the publications made accessible in the public portal are retained by the authors and/or other copyright owners and it is a condition of accessing publications that users recognise and abide by the legal requirements associated with these rights.
• Users may download and print one copy of any publication from the public portal for the purpose of private study or research.
• You may not further distribute the material or use it for any profit-making activity or commercial gain
• You may freely distribute the URL identifying the publication in the public portal

Read more about Creative commons licenses: https://creativecommons.org/licenses/

Take down policy
If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.
Inside the sharing economy: material-discursive enactments of lending and borrowing in consumer culture

Karin Salomonsson, Institutionen för kulturvetenskaper, Lunds universitet

“Why buy when you can borrow?” This slogan comes from a Swedish digital platform intended to facilitate loans between neighbours. Together with a number of similar initiatives it makes up the “third generation” of the sharing economy. Hopes are high that sharing will promote socio-economic and environmental sustainability and present solutions to the effects of an advanced consumer culture, as well as strengthening a feeling of community and mutual trust. “Sharing” appears as an ideologically and politically contested practise, with no inherent meaning in itself. In this paper I want to critically and ethnographically scrutinize its use and practises through looking at material-discursive agency and different enactments, especially concerning the affective turmoil of lending and borrowing. In reality the sharing economy faces an uphill struggle.